MEN'S POLICE COURT

TRUCK DRIVER IS FOUND CRIMINALLY NEGLIGENT

Frank Watt, Who Broke Two Poles and Injured Man, Awaits Sentence

The unusual happened this morning when Frank Watt was "tried-in-the-full" and convicted on a charge of criminal negligence, resulting in what the doctors say, may prove to be lifelong injuries to John McGuigan. Practically all criminal negligence cases long injuries to John McGuigan. Practically all criminal negligence cases are "sent on," and for a while this one seemed to be following the usual course. And what was done was largely at the request of the accused's counsel. W. B. Horkins, who, while not admitting his client's guilt, was anyious to have the case disposed of not admitting his client's guint, was anxious to have the case disposed of in police court. His client was found guilty and now awaits sentence instead of trial by jury.

P. C. Craig stated that he saw Watt driving a truck at Larksmount and Queen at 3.30 p.m. He was going about 45 miles an hour and honking an out of the saw where the saw of the saw o his horn like a man whose enthusiastic desire and sole aim in life was to get somewhere before anyone had time move the place somewhere else. En route he took to the boulevard and hit an iron post. This seemed to intensify his ambition and after travelling a little further, he broke off a telegraph pole, injuring a woman and a man. The man, John McGuig-an, is in hospital with a broken hip

May be Permanently Lame "Doctors," said Crown Attorney Gordon, "say that the man will he in hospital for nine months and may be lame for the remainder of his life." Magistrate Jones decided that enough evidence had been given to justify sommittal for trial. Counsel W. B. Horkins pressed for a summary trial. Mr. Horkins persisted and called his elect to the witness stand.

Watt said he was married and up to the time of the accident was with his employers for five years. He was paid $22 a week.

The police had suggested that the accused had been drinking, later eating peppermints.

Three over-industrious drinkers. Robert Lang. Albert Fox and John Smith, were sent down for three months. Detective Mulholland told Magistrate Jones that Smith had been convicted fourteen times under the L.C.A., and Mr. Smith didn't even mention that there was at least one other Smith in the Dominion of Canada. Fox claimed he "hadn't had a chance."

"I'll give you one now," said Mr.
Jones. "I could make it six months.
I'll only give you three months.
There's your chance."

When James O'Connor and Charles Devlin were assessed $50 or one month for second offences of drunkenness they went down looking like men who had been flattered beyond words.
